

One Step Forward, Two Steps Back

Scenario 1: Brady noticed that the substitute lunch lady forgot to scan his lunch card when he passed by with his tray of food. The line was backing up, and she was getting frustrated when she waved him through the line and away from the counter. He decided that he was going to get a free lunch that day when he made his way to his seat. Take one step forward if you think Brady made the right decision and two steps backward if you think he made the wrong decision.

Scenario 2: Jillian was having trouble with her math test when she approached the teacher. Several other students were asking questions too, so while waiting for her turn, Jillian glanced over at their test papers. Because the boy in front of her was a good student, Jillian knew that his answers were most likely correct for the first three problems. Jillian went back to her desk to change her answers. Take one step forward if you think Jillian made the right decision and two steps backward if you think she made the wrong decision.

Scenario 3: Anders overheard some other team members teasing the new boy in the locker room after basketball practice. The new kid couldn't dribble and was having trouble passing the ball. Anders could see that he felt bad, so he walked over and told his teammates to knock it off and that nobody is perfect. He patted the new boy on the shoulder and let him know that everybody has a rough practice once in a while. Take one step forward if you think Anders made the right decision and two steps backward if you think Anders made the wrong decision.

Scenario 4: Leah did not want to help her mother clean up the kitchen after dinner, so she told her mom that she had a big project due the next day and several articles to read for her literature class. She really only had to read one article, and she was already finished with her project. Take one step forward if you think Leah made the right decision and two steps backward if you think she made the wrong decision.

Scenario 5: Whitney's family always says grace before every meal, so when they went out to eat that night, Whitney suggested that they pray aloud together as usual. Once the waitress had set the last plate down, the family joined hands and bowed their heads to share the common table prayer together. Several other diners took notice. Take one step forward if you think Whitney made the right decision and two steps backward if you think Whitney made the wrong decision.
